THE GRAND, YORK

Built in 1906 as the headquarters of the North Eastern Railway Company, The Grand, York, is an example of early 20th-century architecture. Designed by William Bell and Horace Field, it features elegant marble, oak-panelled spaces, and a majestic Grand Boardroom.

Restored to its original splendour in 2010, The Grand is now an award-winning five-star hotel, recognised for its timeless elegance and exceptional service. A cherished city landmark, in the heart of Yorkshire.

A romantic wedding scene in York. A bride in a white off-the-shoulder dress holds a bouquet of white flowers, and a groom in a black tuxedo with a white shirt and black bow tie kisses her on the cheek. They are standing in a narrow street between a stone wall on the left and a brick building on the right. In the background, the large, ornate Gothic archway of a church is visible. The overall tone is warm and intimate.
